My Story.

My journey as a front-end developer started back in 2010, working as a freelancer for clients all over the world for several years.

After being on my own for a while, I decided to enter the corporate world, and I started working as a software developer at Webflow, the same platform I was using with my freelance clients.

After some exciting months of work at Webflow, I decided to transition to Stripe, where I returned what I love: front-end development.

My success quickly compounded I started receiving job offers from the biggest names in the industry.

All these opportunities led me to travel the world. Eventually, however, I decided to settle down for a more calm and simple routine, and I'm now working at Apple. And you know what? I love what I do! ❤️
